How are the industries that consume metals faring? This will be the topic of a one-day forum on June 15 in New York City. Ryan's Notes has invited experts to take a hard look at industries critical to metals consumption—autos, aerospace, chemicals, construction, energy, housing and steel—to determine their health and their ability to sustain metals demand growth. To place these reports in context, presentations on the global economy, debt and China will be given as well.

A tentative agenda for the day is presented below. Those who attended our 2008 Assessing Metals Markets Forum can attest to the high quality of papers and discussions.
